LION COFFEE.

If LION COFFEE were common, ordinary stuff, coffee drinkers would not insist on having it. It is used in millions of homes because it is the best coffee in the world for the price. If you doubt this, take a single package home and try it.

American soldiers, and through mountain fastnesses of the enemy, to Lucaban, Mauban, down the coast to Antemonan, thence to Tayobas. All this constitutes a record of marching, fighting and valuable service, of which your regiment may feel justly proud. "A sense of duty impels me, and it affords me great pleasure to express to you, and through you to the officers and men of the Thirty-ninth Infantry, my sincere thanks for their soldierly conduct during this trying campaign."

Eptomizing, the work of the Thirty-ninth in importance resolves itself into the points in context:

First, movement north January 1st to Cabuyao, South Rosa and Buan.

Second, movement south January 9th to Santo Tomas, occupying a line from Laguna de Bay to Lake Taal.

Third, fight at San Diego Hill January 21st.

Fourth, Langhorne's march to the Pacific January 28th to February 4th.

Fifth, operations about Majajay January 22d and 23d.

Sixth, fight at San Francisco February 13th.

Seventh, fight at Bay, March 10th.

Col. Bullard was outnumbered ten to one at many points where he met the enemy, and on January 1st and 2d the enemy's fire was concentrated upon him two or more times, but in the vernacular of the negro he was never "teched." While there may be something in the old adage, "the good die young," it found no exemplification as it might apply to the commander of the Thirty-ninth. However pressed, his maxim was, "never turn back," and he never did. His field support, Majors Langhorne, Mulford and Parker, were seemingly omnipresent. Langhorne covered himself with glory at San Diego Hill, and Mulford at Majajay. Parker was equally successful at points in the initial assaults. Langhorne was supported by Captains Flor, Gaughey, Kreger and ter; Mulford by Hilton, Macous, Thorburne and Burt, and Parker by Captains Green and ng, and Lieutenants Welch and ith. Words in this connection, never, are superfluous, for reference to the field and company I will tell the reader where y all were, and the connected dents give judgment of what y did.

When Gen. Schwan closed the campaign in the South it was not only victory but conquest, and Col. Bullard commenced the work of pacification and civil government, in which he was equally successful. Calamba, Los Banos, Santo Tomas, Tannan and San Pablo give ample evidence of it. Tagal suspicion gave way to confidence, and there are very few armed insurgents in all that section of the country.

Col. Bullard's work was such that congratulations were showered upon him. Gen. Bates said: "Am pleased with the efficiency with which you scouted the country and struck the enemy wherever found."

Gen. Wheaton:

"Your reconnaissance and operations as reported are very satisfactory."

Incidents of Gallantry.

Col. Bullard's American Indians are not all officers. They are found in the ranks of the "non-coms" and high privates.

Corporal Evans, of K Company, while on a scouting expedition with a squad of men, became isolated from the comrades while in a skirmish, and he suddenly found himself confronted by eighty or more insurgents, armed with Mausers, Remingtons and Bolos. In his retreat Sergeant Vorrie, a comrade, was killed. Pressed hard, he sought the shelter of a canon, or gulch, and with his trusty krag and about a hundred rounds of ammunition he turned at bay. For five days and nights, without food, without water, save "dews of heaven" that wet the leaves, killing a large number of them. When rescued, eleven rounds of ammunition were all he had left, and although exhausted from hunger and fatigue, his courage was still with him. When questioned by an officer as to what he intended to do, he said: "Ten rounds were for the savages." "And the last one?" "Oh, that was for myself." Evans is as much a hero as Hobson, of Merrimac fame.

While a squad of Casey's men were on a scout out from Santo Tomas, the men came suddenly upon a band of seven insurgents. Corporal Steele was in advance, and on spying them he brought his krag to a quick aim and fired, killing three of them at one shot. They were in a single file line, and his messenger of death crashed through their bodies and they were dead a moment later. The three guns were taken to Calamba as trophies of the most remarkable shot of the insurrection.

When the by-ways were cleared for entering Rosario, Col. Bullard called for volunteers for the dash, and although Col. Anderson, of the Thirty-eighth, the ranking officer, was in command, he did not forbid it and joined the gallant band, which, with them, comprised Col. Crane, Major Longhorne, Capt. Gaines, Capt. Read, Lieutenants Frank and Doane, Private Fruidenthal, Col. Bullard's orderly, Corp. C. M. Simmons and two other men. It was a brilliant affair. No information was at hand as to what might confront them, or as to the strength of the enemy. Death traps and death was possible for all. The enemy had fled, but the attacking party found and liberated 75 to 100 Spanish prisoners, a lot of men and women, as happy and joyous as prisoners at Libby and Belle Isle when Gen. Lee struck his flag at Appomattox. The knowledge that these prisoners were in Rosario may have induced Col. Bullard to make the bold venture, and it may be said in this connection that the Thirty-ninth was instrumental in liberating a large number of prisoners, both American and Spanish, in the several towns it reduced and captured.

Odds and Ends.

This regiment, as before stated, came to the Philippines 1270 strong. Its roster to-day shows less than 800 men for duty, a decimation approximately of 35 per cent. Mausers and Remingtons made sad ravages in its ranks. Disease, the result of exposure and hardships, did the rest. Still the battered remnant is cheerful and ready to go where the old flag leads.

Col. Bullard has a good deal of satisfaction in knowing that the Third Alabama, his old regiment, furnished more officers and men for the Philippines than any other volunteer regiment in the United States service during the Spanish-American war. And all, or nearly all, of them have distinguished themselves in quelling the insurrection here.

With the story of those who fell in battle, and the mortuary record, the history of the Thirty-ninth, Col. Bullard's American Indians, will have been written.

Four companies are now at Balayan, two a Taal, two at Passay, and four at Exposition Barracks in Malate. Officers and men are enjoying rest now so far as it is possible to obtain it in the United States Army. Concluding, The American wishes them God speed wherever duty may call them, and again I say, Spartans all of them.

SLIGHT BLAZE MONDAY.

At 5:50 o'clock on Monday afternoon an alarm from box 19 called the department to a tenant house belonging to Mr. John D. Griffin, on Steele street. The blaze was a small one on the roof, and was quickly extinguished with trifling loss. We can not too highly commend the efficiency and rapidity with which the boys have responded to all alarms of late, and great loss has thus been averted.
